GT Nexus and Transwide form Strategic Alliance

Industry portals join forces, expand reach of transportation networks for customers

Alameda, CA, USA and Brussels, EU (November 19, 2007) – GT Nexus and Transwide today announced that they have formed a partnership. GT Nexus is a global trade and logistics portal and Transwide is a multimodal transport execution hub with presence in Europe and North America and users around the globe. Transwide is a division of Wolters Kluwer.

This partnership gives individual customers of either portal access to a greater level of automation and visibility across more transport modes than they ever had before.

Connectivity and network reach are critical for strategic customers who are trying to automate global supply chains. By interfacing the Transwide platform to GT Nexus both companies expand the breadth of their services by increasing the network reach of their solutions. GT Nexus and Transwide customers now have broader access to key providers, across all modes of transport.

“The big importers and exporters collectively work with thousands of transportation providers,” said Greg Johnsen, EVP of Marketing at GT Nexus. “Ultimately every one of these providers will need to be part of technology-based networks in order to work with key shippers. By joining forces with Transwide, our customers get access to Transwide’s network of carriers. And Transwide customers get access to the major carriers connected to GT Nexus.”

“This agreement fulfills our strategy to provide our customers with one single connection to their entire transport network,” added Eric Van Den Bemden, Sales & Marketing Director at Transwide. “By aligning ourselves with GT Nexus, our customers can now track and manage shipments around the globe, across all modes. This is a win-win-win partnership, for GT Nexus, Transwide and, most important, for all our customers.”

The combined reach of the two portals is now available to all customers in Europe and North America.
